H. Scheduled Items

1. Mayor's Report. Continuing her report from the Committee of the Whole Workshop, Mayor McHenry reported that she met with King County Executive Girmay Zahilay to review concerns about infrastructure, transit, vulnerabilities, and growth planning. She emphasized that non-contiguous cities like Duvall should be considered separately, and

2. called for more direct involvement of elected officials in growth discussions. Although no formal growth target reconciliation was requested, she asked if the County was considering it, and was told the process would restart in 2029, with early data in 2028.

She noted that current growth methods haven't spurred affordable housing, citing infrastructure issues and limited developer interest. The discussion included programs like ARCH (A Regional Coalition for Housing), which have limited applicability due to local support and transit gaps. The meeting concluded with a walk along the Snoqualmie River, where the Mayor pointed out City facilities and signage, including faded signage along the Snoqualmie Valley Trail, to help the County Executive understand local conditions beyond reports. Mayor McHenry's report ended after opening the floor to questions and comments from Councilmembers present. The Councilmember attended the Sound Cities Association Summer Social at Lake Wilderness Lodge in Maple Valley, a scenic venue. The event offered valuable networking opportunities with other City leaders and discussions beneficial to Duvall. Keynote speaker Shannon Braddock, former King County Executive and current President of Greater Seattle Partners, discussed regional economic development and the importance of defining Duvall's identity as a residential, tourist, or arts hub. Councilmember Olen spoke with Robert Boenish, King County's regional outreach representative, about Duvall's housing, infrastructure, traffic, and flooding issues, especially along SR 203. Aware of regional flooding from Carnation, Boenish promised to raise Duvall's issues with policy officials and ensure a quick response to critical infrastructure failures.

Separately, Councilmember Olen reported that he attended a "Working Waterfront Tour" hosted by the Port of Seattle, which included regional elected officials touring port operations, environmental initiatives, and impacts. The event facilitated conversations with Councilmembers and other attendees, fostering relationship-building that can lead to immediate benefits or longer-term, indirect advantages.
